CLUBRochester,
New York

Host to the 1989 U.S. Open and in a word, tough. The first hole — Ben Hogan called it the toughest opening hole he had ever faced — sets the tone for the entire course: long, built for drivers, with a small elevated green jealously guarded by encroaching trees, expertly positioned bunkers and a creek.

GOLF CLUBTroon,
Scotland

The 1989 British Open was the sixth for this classic links course, one of the most venerable championship tests in Britain since 1888. It features the longest (577 yards) and shortest (123 yards) holes in British championship play, huge sandhills, heather and gorse, a stone wall, the sea, and four sinister finishing holes.

GOLF CLUBHawthorn Woods,
Illinois

Host to the 1989 PGA. And a great vacation spot — for a duck. Built on 270 acres with lakes occupying 125 of them. Water comes into play on 11 holes and must be carried on eight shots. There's barely room enough for the 57 sand bunkers. So intimidating, even par always contends and often wins.

Kensington, Australia

Founded in 1882, it's the oldest, longest, toughest course in Australia. Nicklaus redesigned the course in 1977, transforming it from a wind-swept, virtually treeless links type course into a lush, tree-lined layout that is the frequent home of the Australian Open, and one of Golf Magazine's "100 Greatest Courses In The World."

GOLF CLUBNagoya,
Japan

One of Jack's newest creations, this course just opened in October, 1989. It features finely-sculpted holes, with lots of trees, brooks, bunkers, tight, meticulously-manicured fairways and huge greens. As delicate and beautiful as a Japanese garden, as formidable as a Sumo wrestler.

COUNTRY
CLUB*Cornwall, England

Although a young course — opened in 1986 — veteran golf writers are already describing it as the finest tournament golf course in Europe. Jack rearranged the English hill country to create an American-style championship test filled with streams, lakes, undulating fairways, and large, fast greens.

If you want to play great computer golf, you need a great set of clubs. Country clubs. These two Course Disks give you lifetime memberships to six of the most challenging courses in the world — three designed by Jack himself.
